The Golden Gate Bridge

On January 5th, 1933 construction began on what was to become one of the most beautiful Architectural designs of the 20th Century, the Golden Gate Bridge in San Francisco, California. Totalling 8,981 feet in length and 746 feet at its highest point, The Golden Gate bridge has the second longest main span of any suspension bridge in the United States and was ranked fifth on the List of America's Favorite Architecture by the American Institute of Architects.

Designed by the world famous Architect, Irving Morrow, the red appearance of the bridge is actually an orange vermilion called international orange. Morrow chose this color because it blends well with the natural surroundings yet enhances the bridge's visibility in fog. He also added the vertical fluting to the bridge, a stylized geometry in the era's Art Deco style that caught the bay light throughout the day creating dramatic changing shadows.
